

A Study on the Creative Features and Inheritance Paths of Jiangxi Red Piano Music from the Perspective of Regional Culture

Yan Ma, Rong Guo, Yu Song

Jiangxi University Of Finance And Economics, Nanchang Jiangxi 330013

Abstract: From the viewpoint of regional culture, this study examines the creative characteristics and inheritance routes of Jiangxi red piano music. By investigating the incorporation of folk elements and the focus on revolution, the study assesses the music's manifestation of the cultural identity and historical value of Jiangxi. The research also addresses the preservation of the music genre and its transmission through educational settings, community participation, and modern technology, guaranteeing its impact on contemporary culture.

Keywords: Jiangxi red piano music; regional culture; inheritance paths

DOI:10.12417/3029-2344.25.10.002

1. Introduction

A university Jiangxi's east is the most reputable in the area, and it is well regarded as the most centrally and strategically positioned university in the region as well as the most dominant one in east and central China. Its Jiangxi colleges include a university for communications, a university for science and technology, and a Jiangxi Normal University and a Jiangxi University. That Being Said, From the one and only and leading Jiangxi University, it only is provided with a complete Comprehensive Shift in Array, a Comprehensive shift in Geography. Since the university serves as the main one and the leading one in the region, In the provinces of Jiangxi, as the main one, it is crowned with the head university position. Thus, In Jiangxi's provinces, Jiangxi is considered head provinces^[1].

The blending of folk music within revolutionary themes in Jiangxi has become a unique style of piano music. It connects the region's cultural history with its revolutionary history. The music draws on the history of the region. This history is emotionally tied to the struggles the region has faced. Thus, Jiangxi red piano music, along with its cultural and revolutionary spirit, has used the region's music to transcend a simple performance and expresses the spirit of the province.

The purpose of this research study is to gain knowledge about the artistic characteristics of Jiangxi red piano music and how it assimilates the local cultural art forms and the music of the revolution. In addition, it looks at the venues through which this genre has been kept and transmitted to succeeding generations and the use of both customary and modern methods of inheritance. Centering on the local culture of the people and the dominant historical picture, this research intends to demonstrate how the red piano music serves not only as a historical artifact but as a dynamic cultural art form deeply embedded in the present and, thus, a historical form of red piano music. The research endeavors to develop the understanding of the red piano music of Jiangxi as a distinct component of the cultural heritage of the region.

2. Overview of Jiangxi Red Piano Music from the Perspective of Regional Culture

Jiangxi has a revolutionary culture and history that spans many decades and has created a one-of-a-kind contemporary tradition of red piano music that combines the culture of the region and revolutionary music. The red piano music's creation and development can be understood through the province's one of a kind regional identification that has been carved from the province's part in the Chinese revolution. The province's imbuing of the folk tradition and the culture of china and with the nation's river and mountains and with the revolution's history gives us the coherent background to this new of a kind musical genre. These compositions that embody the spirit of the country's liberation struggle also integrate the province's resistance of national liberation, folk tunes, and local rhythms.

Jiangxi's deep revolutionary history is reflected in the songs of the region. Red piano music composers from Jiangxi draw from the Jiangxi folk songs rich in the expression of the people's hope and resilient spirit. The songs are embellished with the province's revolutionary past. And the province is hope famed for being a center of revolutionary activity during the war years. Red piano music from Jiangxi has a unique duality where in folk elements of the region combine with revolutionary spirit to create music rich in expression and nationalistic fervor^[2].

In addition, Jiangxi's unique method of musical composition in the time of revolt gave rise to a style that was easy to grasp and elicited a number of sentiments as well as culturally significant messages. The integration of civil music and the revolutionary spirit gave rise to a form of degree of musical expression and art that captured the emotional disposition of the people and represented the folk history of the province as well as the continuity of culture. To comprehend the red piano music of Jiangxi, one has to take the regional culture and the prevailing political and social realities to account.

3.Creative Features of Jiangxi Red Piano Music

3.1 Fusion of Folk Elements and Revolutionary Themes

Music from Jiangxi red piano is special because it combines the local style with songs from the revolution. The local culture is made up of folk art forms such as Jiangxi opera and the local melodic structures^[3]. The feeling and desperation from the lyrics of the songs make an interesting mix. Quite a few pieces use folk songs with their rhythms and patterns of melody. In folk music the more dramatic the theme the more emotion is derived and its dramatic theme adds to the folk element. The revolutionary piano music is the emotional and tonal quality of the Jiangxi folk music. The music of the Jiangxi folk and the revolution piano music tell a folk story.

3.2 Emphasis on Symbolism and Narrative

Piano songs from the Jiangxi region have long incorporated the symbolization of the hardships and hopes of the people during the time of the Revolution. To demonstrate and explain certain elements of strength, sacrifice, and triumph, composers create and utilize particular structures and motifs. Such motifs encapsulated within the music tell a story and the music becomes a symbol of vibrant expression. Countless motifs represented and mirrored the ups and downs of the Revolution; the oppression, the struggles, and the victory of the people. The symbolization of these motifs allows the composition to represent a culture and history. These songs remain highly emotional to listeners and are a reflection of the history at the time.

3.3 Use of Dynamic Rhythms and Contrapuntal Techniques

The other characteristic of Jiangxi red piano piece is the brilliant employment of rhythm and counterpoint. The alternating patterns radiant are of predominantly perky, syncopated configurations and softer, more tempered arrangements inciting emotions of struggle and hope are characteristic of the highly variable rhythmic structures. The rapid alignments of robust, syncopated rhythmic patterns in the quinteine movements echo the arturning immediacy and impassioned solidarity of the revolution, while the quiescent melodic sections, innate with streamlike fluidity, suggest virtuous retrospection and tender forlorn longing. Furthermore, in the independent strands of the counterpoint no less than multiple dissonant melodic lines are specific in a, more than once, intricate, paradox ideally alluding to the encroachment of the vertical and horizontal agonies. In addition, performative measures create a broad scope of arrangements to the, in addition to, giving the arrangements greater clarity^[4].

3.4 Melodic Simplicity and Emotional Depth

Although Jiangxi red piano music has complex harmonies and layering of rhythms, the music's melodies are generally more simplistic than the accompaniment. The simplicity of the melodies allows the music to be more accessible and relatable to the folk audience. The melodic lines are direct and, on the whole, repetitive to heighten the emotional immediacy of the music. These aspects of the music evoke feelings of oneness and connection to the region's historical and cultural heritage. Because the music employs basic melodic phrases to articulate emotions and feelings, it allows the folk audience to have an emotional experience.

3.5 Integration of Traditional and Modern Piano Techniques

And the traditional-elements of the folk Jiangxi red piano reflect the new-creation and the folk and the piano all reflect syncretism of the both old and new. The composers considering the fact that the music is highly folk influenced, have incorporated western classical piano techniques. These techniques include structural design of music, thematic development and complex harmonies^[5]. The construction of differing musical languages and the folk simple melodies along with the classical music enhances the work due to their sophistication. The all combined elements is the reason Jiangxi red piano music is appropriate not to only the region and the country folk and classical cultures but to all the world music.

Thus, the innovative aspects of the red piano music from Jiangxi region includes the incorporation of the distinctive folk forms and original tunes of the region, the intertwining of the radical elements with the enriching and varied symbolisms, multiple forms of musical textures, and the shifting of the focuses of the compositions which broaden the scope of the radical sentiments of the music. The music reflects the folk culture of the region and embodies radical sentiments due to its appeal, the musical sentiments, and emotional value. The creative employment of both contemporary and traditional piano techniques embodies a radical and superb artistry of the distinct cultural heritage and the revolution of the Jiangxi region^[6].

4. Inheritance Pathways of Jiangxi Red Piano Music

4.1 Preservation through Music Education and Performance

Formal music education is one of the several ways through which the Jiangxi red piano music is passed down. Schools, conservatories, and music academies located in Jiangxi and other parts of the red piano music educating Angola are key players in the red piano music education. In these institutes, students learn not only the techniques of piano playing but also gain insights into the music's history, culture, and significance. With the integration of the curriculum, the Jiangxi red piano music is taught, not merely as a music style, but as an avenue through which culture can be preserved and education facilitated. In this setting, the young and aspiring pianists are incentivized to perform the piano compositions of the composers originating from Jiangxi, whose red piano music compositions. In the local and national competitions, programs performances of the red piano music are used to create awareness and appreciation of the music style. These programs go beyond artistic performances, as they also provide a platform for important and relevant cultural performances. They assist the younger listeners to appreciate the historical narratives in the music, and the music itself. Regular and special concerts, especially those that are centered on the heritage of the regional music, ensure that the red piano music is performed to a wider audience, thus preserving the cultural importance

4.2 Community Involvement and Regional Festivals

Community red piano music initiatives in Jiangxi and cultural festivals celebrate the region's music and cultural identity connections. In these festivals, the region's music and culture historical connections, red piano music, are fortified from the region's music history red piano music and culture historians, composers, and pianists. The surrounding communities celebrate the region's music history^[7]. The Jiangxi red Culture Festival and Jiangxi Music Festival offer communities traditional and modern red folk music. The red piano music genre is appreciated and celebrated, sustaining its passion and love in the modern and old folk music modern and old folk music. The festivals provide the community with contemporary and traditional music. The modern and old folk music is celebrated, sustaining its passion and love. The festivals provide contemporary and traditional folk music. The music is appreciated and celebrated, sustaining its passion and love. The festivals provide the community with contemporary and traditional music. The modern and old folk music is celebrated, sustaining its passion and love. The festivals promote the community's collective music appreciation. In the festivals, contemporary and traditional folk are showcased. The community is provided with contemporary and traditional music. The folk music is celebrated. The festivals promote the community's collective music appreciation generation. The festivals protect and transmit red piano music.

4.3 Integration into National Cultural Heritage and Institutional Support

Jiangxi's red piano music has been culturally recognized and institutionalized as part of China's national music heritage. Over the years, the Chinese state and culture sector have recognized the consumer red music and, red piano music, as part of culture redancement and national identity. The nation-wide music preservation and cultural heritage programs have cataloged, archived, and promoted the red piano music of Jiangxi. These efforts have made the works accessible to the world as well as to the people of China. The Chinese National Conservatory of Music and Central Conservatory of Music have been, and continue to be, instrumental in the legacy of the red piano music of Jiangxi. These institutions introduce the region's musical traditions to their programs and performance, ensuring the red piano music is appreciated in the light of the other music of China. Moreover, the new digital archives and other platforms that host music sheets and recordings have made the work available to the public^[8]. The red piano music is now accessible to all, including musicians, music scholars and the interested general public.

4.4 Use of Media and Technology in Promoting the Music

Technology and the media contribute significantly to the dissemination and preservation of the Jiangxi red piano music. YouTube, WeChat, and various streaming services facilitate both the regional and global access of Jiangxi red piano music. Live performances, red piano music, and historical videos are recorded and posted and enjoy musical engagement from users. Recordings of performances and instructional videos are digitally published, allowing people to access the music and engage with it. Furthermore, digital sheets, virtual classes, and music applications do offer the younger generations unprecedented opportunities to learn and perform the red piano music. Students who do not reside in China and those in distant locations are able to learn the regional music through digital means. Technology has helped Jiangxi red piano music penetrate previously inaccessible regions. Students now engage with the music, which they were not able to do previously.

4.5 Artistic Adaptations and Contemporary Compositions

A different side of hereditary Jiangxi red piano music is the adaptation and re-interpretation of current composers and musicians^[9]. Modern creators of red piano music pay tribute to the genre and its traditional aspects while red piano music is adapted to suit contemporary global trends. Such adaptations of red piano music to other genres and contemporary music are relevant to the younger generation and preserve the musical tradition of the contemporary red piano music. The red piano music is also adapted to other art forms like dance and visual art; this helps to preserve the red piano music tradition and transfer it to the younger generation. For instance, red piano music with modern dance or audiovisual art in collaboration is helpful to preserve the genre and to contemporary audiences. The adaptation of this music to current trends is a way to preserve its artistic expression.

4.6 Challenges and Future Prospects

The preservation and promotion of Jiangxi red piano music continue to face opposition and challenges despite steady progress. One of the primary concerns is the potential for the musical elements to become either diluted or misrepresented within the frameworks of modernization. Furthermore, the distinctiveness of Jiangxi red piano music is especially vulnerable to the Western mainstream influence that currently reigns within the global music industry. Fortunately, the regional affiliation and multicultural pride portrayed in the red piano music of Jiangxi suggest that this regional art form will continue to flourish as a cultural emblem of the area. Thanks to ongoing educational efforts, community participation, and the role of media in promoting this unique art form, areas that play Jiangxi red piano music will enable future generations to delight in the music while enhancing their appreciation of the rich heritage it represents.

5. Conclusion

The research about the culture of the music of the Red piano in Jiangxi draws attention to the particular fusion of local customs and revolutionary topics during the bedition period. This music, as a culture posPartchi, exemplifies one of the numerous forms in which the provenance of the fine art. As a fabric of expression, rut imes the culture of the province. The music of phong, jiangxi red piano, folk, and sybill and rhythm mainets is a fusion of culture in the revolutionary history of the province. This music also the red piano of jiangxi also of piano folk also the history of Jiang, the of folk the education of music, the festivals of the region, the educational instuitutes, and the technology of the present. The fusion of this variety of methods ensures the red piano of jiangxi music positively retains its charm to the youth of today. But incessant challenges continue to confront the culture in the preservation and the passing of this music. This is particularly evident in and in the pervading of popular music but, the odyssey of the music of the red piano of Jiangxi with the incessant work of profssors and enjoyers and the music culture of the massive institutions ensure the culture of this music is rich and will prevail. Music from Jiangxi red piano will continue to evolve and serve, both as a culture emble, and as a work, alive and conveying, the history and values of the region.

References:

- [1] Jing L.The Significance of Chinese Classical Piano Music to the Music Therapy[J].BASIC&CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY&TOXICOLOGY,2020,127178-178.
- [2] Cheng D.The nationalization characteristics of Chinese Piano Music works[J].International Journal of Frontiers in Sociology,2021,3.0(15.0).
- [3] Hui L,Keke D,Junfei B,et al.Analysis of the Characteristics and Effects of Red Music During the Agrarian Revolutionary War[J].SHS Web of Conferences,2023,158.
- [4] Sun L.The Application of“Red Culture”in Musical Drama[J].Journal of Humanities,Arts and Social Science,2023,7(6).
- [5] Yi K.Analysis on the dissemination path of red music under the background of new media[J].Frontiers in Art Research,2024,6(10).
- [6] Chen L.The Aesthetic Presentation of Chinese Classical Music in Piano Performance[J].Journal of Contemporary Educational Research,2024,8(12):127-132.
- [7] Zou J,Li X,Lin K,et al.Research on Digital Inheritance and Protection of Chinese Guqin Music[J].Arts Studies and Criticism,2025,6(1).
- [8] Yuan Y.A Study on the Application of Chinese Traditional Music Elements in Modern Piano Art Creation[J].Lecture Notes in Education,Arts,Management and Social Science,2025,3(6):270-275.
- [9] He Y,Wang S,Liu B,et al.Red musical identity and subjective wellbeing:a longitudinal study of the chain mediating roles of awe and prosocial behavior[J].Frontiers in Psychology,2025,161635179-1635179.